

Learning and exploring digital possibilities through prototyping

This work is part of a TNA/RLUK Professional Fellowship hosted at Wellcome Collection.

Professional Fellowships pair an employee of The National Archives with a host organisation from Research Libraries UK (or vice versa) to explore a professional practice question.

What could these topic models be about?

Questions

Wellcome Collection collects material about health and human experience. What do the topics suggest about what can be found in the collection?

Can we trust our interpretations of the topics? Can other data help us to interpret the topics?

Which topics are useful? Which are meaningless?

How can we use topics to search or explore the collection? To understand it from a new perspective, or to inspire questions about it?

THE

NATIONAL

ARCHIVES

Bernard Ogden, bernard.ogden@nationalarchives.gov.uk, The National Archives (UK)

